Coming to terms with being bi and ace released a giant weight I hadn't realized I'd been carrying all these years.

It was liberating.

Still, I found myself succumbing to societal expectations of hetero attraction.

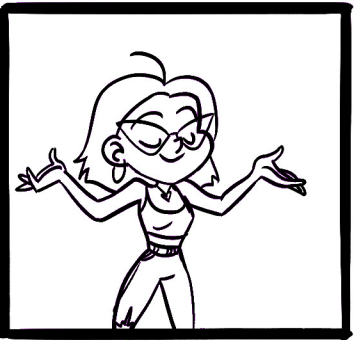

After that hilariously short stint, I came to terms that I wouldn't find any attraction that way.

which is fine!

But, I've begun to wonder if I'd ever feel attraction again.

I suppose that remains to be seen.

What matters is I'm understanding who I am. I don't need to keep questioning my sexuality.

I am who I am
and that's okay.
